

Why am I learning/ using this?

- Note making is a very important literacy skill for life and work.
- You might have been asked to watch video clips or find information for books or websites in some of your home learning tasks. This is a great way to do so.
- You are learning this so that you can begin to practise this skill in all of your subjects/ topic areas across our Campus.
- All you really need is a bit of paper and something to write with- but you can make notes digitally too by downloading our Word version of the Cornell Note Making page.

To make your notes you should split your page up like this- or you can use one of the online template in our Home Learning area.

To type on directly open up our Word version.
To write on you would be better with our PDF version.

You should decide on main keywords when you have read them over AFTER the lesson
